i'm 10 minutes past curfew as I circle out the black curtain falling alongside your garage door and suddenly it's me, not alone - lowt with David Bowie and the familiar spray of late night suburban sprinklers misting my car like a baptism and i take in new air in new lungs once the window rolls down and i reach my hand out i'm grasping at midnight blue trying to tuck it to my chest like a loved sweater and i drive fast and alone and breath deep till i hit dirt road and begin to crawl because the moment deserves to be taken slow.
houses roll by, stood out attention guardians of my childhood street and as the songs wind down and i lean into the curve of home i see the orange glow
of the light left on just for me.
and when I stop
when the music stops
and the engine stops
and the journey ends,
i stand in stillness.
quiet.
except,
for the crickets and the soft sweet humming of a july night when i look on at the shadows towards the green i've seen from every angle in every type of day.
i look up at the stars that i endeavor to know the way i know the ground beneath my sun and i'm so rich to be here to know me and to know you.

Hello Sun

mia reaney

There is something about the sun that makes me miss her so

Her dedication to illumination was never her choice

But she proceeds with such grace that you'd almost think it was

She was born in flames, destined to be forever engulfed in her own destruction

It makes me feel like I could be beautifully coerced into greatness too

In the darkest hours of the night are when I need her the most

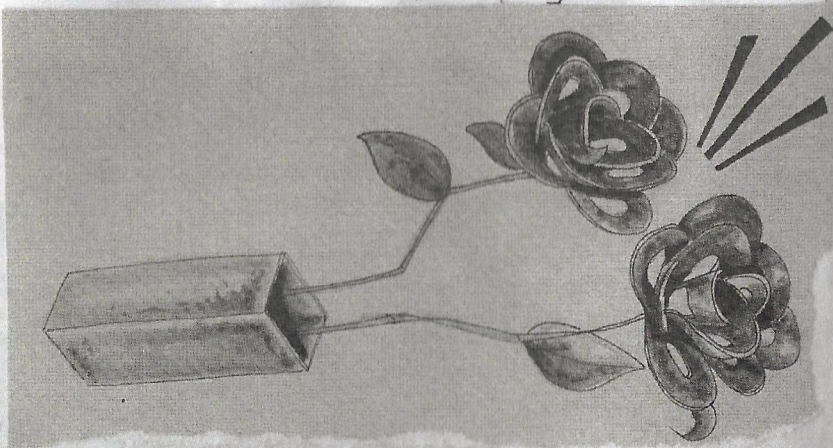

I cannot wait until morning, even a few hours without her is always too many

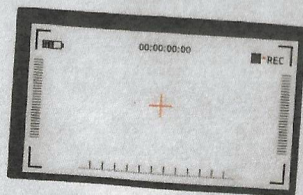

Come back around and show me what I'm capable of Remind me why you shine

Remind me why I should too

During my break, I would drink a cup of tea, then open a book to read, and then go out for a walk to see the flowers on the roadside.

Another

Jersey's shore shape shifts sand sifts, grains slip between my fingers
will there be another?
where stale air meets crepid carpet I searched spirit in frigid chambers stumbling fumbling, night as ink

I have grown unaccustomed—eyes filmy to their soft gestures waiting chest born treasures permeates kind kindled trinkets, hand in thumb sigh, whispered giggles tears which welded me tender seeped through t-shirt fibers adjoining neighbor, balm at embrace guested by fate, and chance it may be stun and spin conscience, I have found it seated late, cross-legged beside me
